Wilfred Owen

Wilfred Owen was one of the most acclaimed soldier poets of World War I. Born in 1893, he was a devout Christian who initially supported the war effort. However, his experiences on the Western Front transformed him into a passionate anti-war poet. His poems, such as "Dulce et Decorum Est" and "Anthem for Doomed Youth," are powerful indictments of the horrors of war.

Owen was killed in action just one week before the end of the war. He was only 25 years old. His death was a tragic loss to literature, but his legacy lives on through his powerful and moving poetry.

Isaac Rosenberg

Isaac Rosenberg, soldier poet killed on the Western Front

Isaac Rosenberg was another talented soldier poet who was killed on the Western Front. Born in 1890 to a poor Jewish family, Rosenberg was a gifted artist and poet. He was deeply affected by the anti-Semitism he experienced in his early life, and his poetry often explores themes of alienation and displacement.

Rosenberg enlisted in the British Army in 1915. He served on the Western Front for two years, during which time he wrote some of his most powerful poems. These poems, such as "Break of Day" and "Dead Man's Dump," are haunting and evocative expressions of the horrors of war.

Rosenberg was killed in action in 1918. He was only 28 years old. His death was a tragic loss to literature, but his legacy lives on through his powerful and moving poetry.

Siegfried Sassoon

Siegfried Sassoon was one of the most decorated and outspoken soldier poets of World War I. Born in 1886, Sassoon was a wealthy and privileged young man who initially supported the war effort. However, his experiences on the Western Front led him to become a vocal critic of the war.

Sassoon's poetry is known for its biting satire and its unflinching depiction of the horrors of war. Poems such as "The Dug-Out" and "Glory of Women" are powerful indictments of the war machine.

Sassoon was wounded in action several times during the war. In 1917, he was declared mentally unfit for service after he publicly criticized the war. However, he continued to write poetry throughout the war and after.

Sassoon survived the war and went on to become a successful writer and poet. He died in 1967 at the age of 80.

Robert Graves

Robert Graves, soldier poet killed on the Western Front

Robert Graves was one of the most prolific and influential soldier poets of World War I. Born in 1895, Graves was a brilliant scholar who initially supported the war effort. However, his experiences on the Western Front led him to become disillusioned with the war.

Graves' poetry is known for its lyrical beauty and its exploration of themes such as love, loss, and the nature of war. Poems such as "The Soldier" and "The Shout" are moving and evocative expressions of the human experience of war.

Graves survived the war and went on to become a successful writer and poet. He died in 1985 at the age of 90.

Edmund Blunden

Edmund Blunden was one of the most lyrical and evocative soldier poets of World War I. Born in 1896, Blunden was a gifted poet who initially supported the war effort. However, his experiences on the Western Front led him to become a disillusioned critic of the war.
