The Voronezh Notebooks are a collection of poems written by Russian poet Osip Mandelstam during his exile in the city of Voronezh in the 1930s. Composed under the oppressive shadow of Stalin's regime, these poems offer a poignant glimpse into the inner workings of a brilliant mind grappling with adversity and censorship.

Mandelstam's verse in the Voronezh Notebooks is characterized by its cryptic symbolism, fragmented imagery, and haunting beauty. He explores themes of isolation, despair, and the search for meaning amidst chaos. The poems are a testament to Mandelstam's unwavering commitment to artistic expression, even in the face of persecution.

The Voronezh Notebooks remained unpublished during Mandelstam's lifetime, but they were eventually smuggled out of Russia and published in the West.
